No Experience or Education Needed

Because each film environment differs, movie extras who are needed to make the set look natural also vary. Therefore, people of all shapes and sizes and ethnicities can get work as movie extras.

Meet Celebrities

Imagine rubbing shoulders with the most popular actors and celebrities in show business! A day of background acting could already mean meeting or having the opportunity to act alongside your Hollywood idols.

Easy Work

Extras are used as human props to make a film environment look natural so they often have little or no lines to memorize at all. No big acting skills are required either. They just sit, stand, or walk behind the main actors and they instantly become part of the movie.

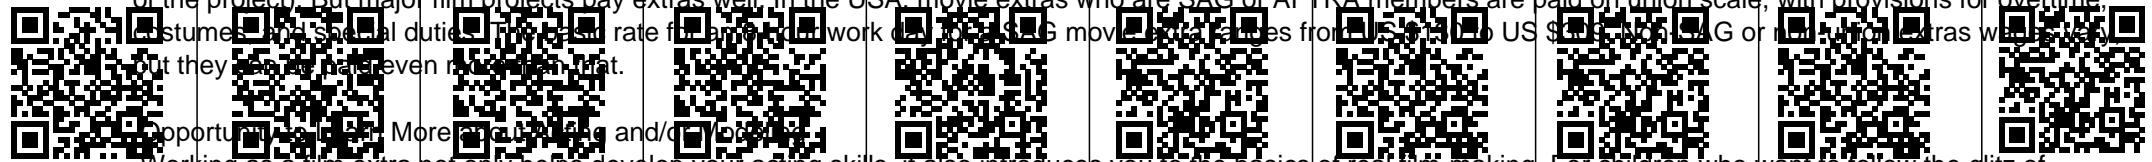

Work Flexible Hours

Extras often have long periods of waiting around during film shoots while the film crew prepare for their part to be ready to be filmed. Waiting around during the film shoot - while getting paid - also means that you have time for internet, reading, texting, or catching up on things you needed to do.

Competitive Pay

On smaller or student productions, background extras acting usually offers low or little pay except for film exposure and/or "copy and credit" (no pay, only copy and credit of the project). But major film projects pay extras well. In the USA, movie extras who are SAG or AFTRA members are paid on union scale, with provisions for overtime, costumes, and special duties. The basic rate for a day's work is $100 for SAG movie extras and $125 for AFTRA or union extras who are not SAG members. But they can earn even more than that.

Opportunity to learn More about acting and/or directing. Working as a film extra not only helps develop your acting skills, it also introduces you to the basics of real film-making. For children who want to follow the glitz of Hollywood, playing as movie extras can be used as first film experience to their acting career. For adults, background acting can be a fun part-time job. Extras get experience being on the set of many movies, television shows, and commercials. Plus, extras get to meet the people behind the film - producers, casting directors, agents, etc. all those important figures that could open career doors to future superstars.
