

Great Pyrenees Puppies for ADOPTION at PAWS Humane (PAWS Humane)

Great Pyrenees

VITAL STATS
DOG BREED GROUP—Working Dogs
HEIGHT—General: 2 feet, 1 inch to 2 feet, 8 inches tall at the shoulder
WEIGHT—General: 85 to 160 pounds
LIFE SPAN—10 to 12 years

- The Great Pyrenees is okay in apartments because he's mellow. But homes with large yards are better.
- If you want a dog you can walk off leash, this may not be the dog for you because of his independent thinking and wandering tendencies.
- Expect some shedding on a constant basis and at least one major shedding period per year. On the up side, the Great Pyrenees only requires about 10 minutes of brushing a week.
- A Pyrenees can be difficult to train because of his ability to think on his own. He's not a good match for new or timid dog owners, because he needs consistency and a strong owner who will socialize him and train with positive reinforcement.
- He's a wonderful watchdog for the family, but he needs socialization to keep from becoming shy or aggressive to both dogs and people.
- He thrives with his family and should live inside the house. He can become bordered and destructive when separated from his family or left to live out in the backyard.
- A Great Pyrenees is generally loving and gentle with younger creatures, so he's a wonderful dog for families with children.
- He's a hard-core barker and is not recommended for homes where his barking can disturb others.
- Great Pyrenees do best in cooler climates, but DON'T clip his hair during hot weather. His coat insulates him and keeps him cool, so when you shave the hair you compromise his natural protection from the sun.
- He needs exercise, but not as much as you'd think. — 20 to 30 minutes a day is fine.
- He has a double dewclaw that should not be removed but should be kept trimmed.
