The Mood Disorders Service at Dartmouth is screening interested people (ages 21-70) with depression or a history of depression who are currently taking one or more antidepressant medications, for a non-treatment study. This is a neuroimaging study comparing the functional magnetic resonance (fMRI) brain images of people who have or have not been helped by taking antidepressants to learn if treatment resistance may be identified by fMRI.

All study activities take place at Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center, in Lebanon, NH during routine business hours, Monday through Friday. To inquire about participation, please call or email mood "at" dartmouth "dot" edu. Please type "Imaging Study" in the subject line so that we can identify your.
