Please pay strict attention to the images: ink levels are at 95% estimated. Yes, this is expired ink. Has that been an issue? No, you're looking at the ink levels after paying $17 on the "bay" for a full set of cartridges, installing them, cleaning the print-heads, aligning the print-heads and roughly 4 or 5 dozen mixed mode (some B&W, some color) prints later. A full set of 6 inks for this averages $65-80 depending on where you go. Again, $17 is the average on a popular auction site and this printer just tells you "hey, these are expired, press this button to find out more", then "ok" and goes about doing what it was designed to do.

I've owned it for less than a year, the scanning and printing are spot-on. It's probably one of the most reliable pieces of my tech I own, but as of today I'm leaning out due to longer hours at the office for a very long time and can print there from my desk. I'd rather do away with this instead of sitting around.

It's currently attached via it's LAN port to my home network, all of my devices see it, including my LG G2 and I've printed from that device countless times.

No issues whatsoever with this.

You're getting the printer with the ink levels shown in the picture(s), A/C adapter and either a USB A-B (printer cable) or a standard CAT5 LAN cable (your choice, just specify which you prefer in the email).
