August 2010. Bluegill, largemouth bass, and black crappie are the primary management species, with walleye, smallmouth bass, and northern pike managed as secondary species. Long Lost Lake has an interesting history. Since the early 1990's, the level of the lake has risen twelve feet, and recently has receded by two feet. This has increased the surface area of the lake by approximately 100 acres, flooding lake cabins (some of which are still standing), and creating large amounts of standing timber in deep water. This type of aquatic habitat is unique to natural lakes in northern Minnesota, and is more typical of a flood control reservoir.

Another recent change has been the unauthorized introduction of smallmouth bass. These fish were first documented in 1993, and are now well established in Long Lost Lake, making it one of the only lakes in the Bemidji area with a fishable smallmouth bass population. The bluegill catch rate from the 2010 population assessment (38.5/TN) was nearly twice the median catch rate for class 25 lakes.

Bass anglers should enjoy the scenery and diversity of habitat on Long Lost Lake and have an opportunity for some quality fishing. Walleye have been sampled in low numbers in the past few assessments. Average size of the walleye catch in 2010 was impressive, with fish up to 29.7 inches in length captured, and a wide range of age classes present in the catch. Walleye utilize deep water habitat in Long Lost.
