Baller Mind Frame and Pop Culture Spin are members of the Complex Media family and we're looking to add both sports and pop culture writers to each respective team. Our sports content has been featured on FOX Sports, Sports Illustrated, and other sports website destinations, as well as getting to interview NBA players, hip hop artists, attend sneaker events, and exclusive sneak peeks relative to video games like for Madden. Our pop culture blog is relatively new, but we've been able to secure movie previews, as well as interviews with directors and musicians.

We're looking for experienced writers that can contribute at least once a week, but ideally more often. We have a solid and experienced Editorial team that will help guide the direction of content, as well as making our team of writers stronger in their craft. Something that we're really looking for is passion for sports and pop culture, the written word, and the drive to create great content.

What we need to see from you are at least three links/samples to previous related content. If you have a Twitter account, please feel free to send that too! We admittedly pay a very minuscule amount per post (a measly quarter), but do have bonuses relative to hitting pageview benchmarks. However, we also offer the opportunity to grow as a writer and being a part of a steadily growing sports and/or pop culture blog with exposure across the Complex Media.
