"Pennsylvania courts apply the rule that "a criminal conviction may not stand merely on the out of court confession of one accused, and thus a case may not go to the fact finder where independent evidence does not suggest that a crime has occurred." Commonwealth v. Edwards, 521 PA. 134, 144, 555 A.2n 818 (1989) Commonwealth v. Byrd, 490 Pa 544, 566, 417 A.2d 173, 179 (1980). As stated by our Supreme Court.

In a word, out of court confessions and statements are inadmissible in a court of law unless there is independent evidence that shows that the crime or crimes have been committed. At that point in the preceding the assistant district attorney stated that he had a statement from the codefendant implicating Gay in the murder. At that point the judge, in the assurance from the assistant district attorney, that independent evidence would be available for a trial was held over to the July 5, 1970 trial the assistant district attorney never presented any evidence the statement that the codefendant allegedly had made and the codefendant never took the stand in the trial. Without the independent evidence that the Corpus Delicti Rule requires, Gay's statement was inadmissible in a court of law without Gay's statement the prosecution did not have a case. That does not mean the prosecution is going on with the "malicious prosecution" of Robert Gay.

Six members of that homicide unit who are the subject of the movie, "The Thin Blue Line" were convicted four months before Gay's trial of violating the constitutional rights of the suspect and witnesses mentioned in the movie by beating them in order to get a confession which led to a conviction. The former suspect that they beat until he confessed, had not committed the murders. After he was convicted the real murderer confessed to the murders. The Philadelphia Assistant District Attorney had the audacity to put on the stand at Gay's trial one of the convicted detectives to testify to the "legality" of the statement that he and three of the other convicted detectives had obtained from Gay. When the detective's appeals were denied they were sent to a federal prison in Florida to serve their sentences. Please sign the petition and encourage others to sign it.
