Suicide

There are countless ads on TV, radio and the internet warning you about drug abuse, heart attacks and cancer. Leading causes of death discussed openly in publication, social media and around the water cooler. The one term we rarely see or hear, is "Suicide". Even in today's society, the word suicide is considered "taboo". People don't like to see it or hear it, let alone say it. It's not easy or cheerful, nothing that'll make you smile; people avoid it.

The less we talk about suicide, the stronger the stigma becomes. The stigma we've created surrounding suicide has led to countless lives lost. If we can't talk about it, then the people we love will continue to suffer in silence. Very few people can say that they weren't directly affected by suicide. Suicide is the 3rd leading cause of death in the world for those aged 15-44 years. Did you realize there is one death by suicide in the world every 40 seconds? I never did; it never occurred to me. Not until six months ago anyways.

At an early age I knew the term "suicide" but it wasn't directly relevant. As I got older, age 11-16, I faced several challenges with depression and suicidal thoughts. The idea and appeal of suicide became more realistic and relevant to my personal experience. Even then, it wasn't something I talked about. To this day, I doubt my friends or family have any idea how close I came. I was one of the lucky ones though; able to battle those demons and eventually I overcame them. Since then I haven't looked back, which has allowed me to avoid discussing it. That was the case, until suicide impacted my life in a way I never expected.

Growing up as a kid in small-town Maine 20 years ago, was very different from what it is today. We didn't have cell phones at age 6, few computers, no social media and your parents forced you to play outside. That's when I became "best friends" with a boy named Chris. We were thicker than thieves throughout elementary and middle school. He was the closest thing I had to a brother. We spent countless hours exploring the field behind his house, riding bikes, or building forts.

Since he was a year older, he was practically my idol. Every sport he played, I wanted to play. The same with musical instruments. Not only that, but he was the only person I had known that didn't judge me. He didn't care about the clothes I wore, how much weight I gained or how nice my parent's house was. He accepted me for who
