Do our lives follow along the direction of a track we lay, or are we already on the track, and the only thing keeping us from our destination is our actions? Life presents us with opportunities, as well as obstacles, and when we are confronted by either of the two, one naturally takes makes a decision and takes action in the form they feel is most beneficial to themselves when put in a certain situation, but sometimes we face something we've never seen before and there's something that speaks from inside. Knowing between doing right and wrong for the most part is learned through life experience and repercussion, but what happens when you encounter something you've never come face to face with before in life, and a sudden echo of unknown reasoning strikes, and makes you hesitate. Is it instinct? Logic? Rationale? If you love someone deeply and faced losing them, would you resort to corrupting your own morals if it meant saving them? Rationale says, "if it's within reason," but the heart says something different, it says nothing. Or does it?

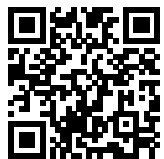

I am starting the production of this feature film in June 2015 and I need actors to give life to these roles, I am interested particularly in people who enjoy cinema, not solely trained actors, if you have experience that's great, if not don't be deterred, I have worked with many people with zero prior experience and have found them to be sensational characters in my past filming.

If interested please submit a head shot, demo reel, or just email if you are interested in being part of this new and very different film.
