Upgrading to a different set. They have some miles on them but work as they should. One of the fronts leaks a bit and one has a little play in the upper mount. They still ride great for being a cheaper brand of coilover, and you can go pretty low (like scraping frame rails low). They are height and dampening adjustable. I have never messed with the settings because I am happy with the ride and stiffness, I've only changed the height and camber settings. They are tolerable around town and feel stable at speeds well over 120 mph. I'll get pictures up as soon as I get a chance to pull them off the car, but here is how I have them set as of now. They go plenty lower if you desire. If you bring cash and are serious about buying them I can take you for a test ride so you can see how well they ride.
