Both my husband and I are college educated looking for management type position. His degree is in education. However he has been dealt a bad hand by being released for having chemo last year and battling a bone marrow disorder. I have children to think of. I have a child going to college who needs things. We are really very close to loosing our home and everything else. Nothing in my life really matters anymore. Everything is redundant. I need some help, some direction. I don't want anyone's money. I just want to move forward and have some stability and normalcy. Can someone please tell me kindly what to do or where to get help? We do need paying jobs with health insurance. Please help us get back to we belong. By belong I mean normal working hours, normal everything, no greed, just no worries. We are a family who is not looking for freebies. We are educated and want to earn a living. Our health insurance is astronomical and we get no government aid. That is our major.
