I am a writing and English tutor who has taught and tutored process-based* essay writing for more than 30 years.

I have tutored third-graders to college students.

I was taught the theory and practice of teaching essay-writing three times--at the University of California-San Diego, the University of Alabama, and New York University (NYU).

I specialize in the five-paragraph essay, an approach applicable to essays of any length.

I have also tutored screenwriting and short story and poetry writing.

(A widely published essayist, poet and short story writer, I now write screenplays.)

I charge $50/hour, firm.

To review my resume and discuss your tutoring needs, please email or call me.

I look forward to the prospect of helping your child--or you--read better, write better, think more critically, and/or speak better.

* "Process-based" means breaking essay writing into smaller, more manageable steps and aspects. The four aspects are content, organization, development, and language. The six steps are 1) know and/or research topic, 2) brainstorm and/or freewrite, 3) outline/plan essay, 4) draft essay, 5) evaluate draft, 6) improve draft. Though longer than the one-paragraph, not-developed, most commonly taught, this process guarantees a well-organized, well-developed, and well-written essay.

A product of a program developed and implemented at Columbia and NYU, respectively, this five-paragraph essay writing method at NYU, the University of Alabama, and New York University.

I have tutored students from counties, elementary and middle schools, high schools, colleges, and universities. These include the Dalton School (Manhattan, New York), the United Nations International School, Columbia University, Clifton-Harmon High School, Anne M. Donner Middle School, Robert F. Wagner Middle School (MS 167), the Ramaz School, the Professional Children's School, the University of California-San Diego, Fordham University, NYU, and Dartmouth College.

P.S. The above-mentioned process can be learned and used up/abbreviated for in-class and standardized-test essays. I have helped students elevate their SAT, ACT and GRE verbal/writing scores.

P.P.S. The same process can be used to write great paragraphs for students not yet required to write full essays.

P.P.S. Based in New York City, I have tutored students from other parts of the US via Skype, using Google Docs. Payment is made through.
