How to Stop Foreclosure Oahu

You don't have to allow your Oahu home to get foreclosed upon - there are alternatives. When you're scared of losing your home (understandable!), life can be very stressful. Some people become so paralyzed by fear that they don't do anything at all, which is the worst thing to happen. We strongly recommend that you take action to stop foreclosure Oahu TODAY - don't wait. Your bank certainly won't wait to keep moving ahead with the foreclosure.

These steps may include any of the following:

- * Loan modification
- * Work out an arrangement with your mortgage lender
- * Selling your home before the foreclosure date
- * Even filing for bankruptcy (talk to a lawyer if considering that).

Current laws normally allow your lender to take back your house since it's the recorded collateral for your mortgage loan that's now in default, but your lender must still follow specific steps.

The three most important steps of foreclosure are 1) pre-foreclosure, 2) lawsuit, and 3) auction of your property. When homeowners first begin to fall behind on their mortgage payments and aren't able to get current within a couple of months, the bank will usually put the mortgage into pre-foreclosure. In this stage, the bank/lender will likely call you to get an update on your financial history and how the work out is going for the borrower. You will be in contact with a financial advisor who will make a final payment plan if the plans are not a voluntary guarantee or privilege. Finally, interest at a high charge, more than double the rate on the original loan, though it will make a more expensive play for pre-closure. Early later on if nothing is resolved.

In the second stage of the foreclosure process, your bank or lender will file a Notice of Default (commonly referred to as the "NOD") with the county recorder's office. Generally, you (the homeowner) will have a certain period of time to respond to the NOD and a hearing will be set with at the courthouse. The lenders will move forward in getting a default judgment against borrowers who do not make an appearance to stop foreclosure. And/or respond to the complaint. This makes it easy for banks to proceed through this step of the foreclosure process, no matter how right or wrong it may be. But if the borrowers don't stand up for their foreclosure rights, the lender can often obtain an easy victory in the courts.

The most common final step to in the foreclosure process is when the house is auctioned by at the courthouse. Once the auction has been finalized, the new owner will take ownership of the house. Sometimes, actually many times, it's the lender itself that will end up taking back the property. Since they will want to liquidate it off their books as soon as possible, they'll begin the eviction process.

To put a stop to this and avoid foreclosure Oahu, borrowers should be informed of how the process will proceed in the timelines for each of the above stages of foreclosure. Knowledge and the willingness to TAKE ACTION are your greatest tools at this serious moment. It should be noted that lenders or their attorneys often brush up really close to these rules (or outright break them), but it's still up to the owners to defend their homes against such violations. Understanding the foreclosure process will not guarantee they are able to save their home, but it can make the difference between making a real plan of action and being caught totally unaware of important aspects of how foreclosure works.
