Have you noticed that your toddler's language development seems to be going more slowly than others of his or her age, but he or she seems to be developing normally otherwise?

Your toddler may be eligible to participate in research at Boston University's Child Language Lab. Our studies take place in a comfortable setting at Boston University's Charles River campus. Parents participate with their toddlers in a one-time play session which usually lasts about an hour. During this session, we show short video clips or play with toys and pictures.

We hope that you will join us in our efforts to find out how children learn language! If you are interested in participating, or in receiving more information, please reply via email to this posting or contact us via our website at: <http://www.bu.edu/childlanguage>.

There is no monetary compensation for participation, but children receive a small-value age-appropriate gift. Free parking is provided.

We look forward to hearing from you!
