ABOUT CHINESE FISTOLOGY

Chinese Fistology is a martial arts school in Portland, Oregon that teaches traditional Chinese martial arts, also known as kung fu.

The styles taught at this school are Bamboo Forest Temple Praying Mantis and the Internal Martial Arts.

Bamboo Forest Temple Praying Mantis (????????; Cantonese: Kwong Sai Jook Lum Gee Tong Long; Mandarin: Jiangxi Zhu Lin Shi Tang Lang) is a style of kung fu belonging to the Southern Praying Mantis family of Chinese martial arts. Bamboo Forest Temple Praying Mantis has aspects of both internal and external techniques, and includes weapons training.

The Internal Martial Arts training includes the Yang, Chen, and Sun Styles of Taijiquan, Yiquan, Xingyiquan, Baguazhang, Push Hands, Weapons, and Qigong.

There is a wealth of knowledge and philosophy behind the concept of Chinese Fistology; for thousands of years, that knowledge has been passed down from one generation of students to another. Each generation, there are only a few students with the interest, patience, and perseverance to learn the art, and pass it down to the next generation. Martial arts training must include internal and external forces, mental and physical abilities. Through the kung fu styles of Bamboo Forest Temple Praying Mantis

(????????) and the internal martial arts (??), students at this school learn to unify their body and mind into one, and to embody the principles of Chinese Fistology.

Sifu Koo Kam Shing (Sifu John Koo) was a Disciple of both Grand Master Lee Wing Sing and Grand Master Wong Yuk-Kong of Bamboo Forest Temple Praying Mantis. Sifu Koo trained under both Grand Masters for many years in Hong Kong. Sifu Koo is the only Disciple of both Grand Masters who is teaching today. When Sifu Koo moved to Portland, Oregon, he continued his training as the disciple of the internal martial arts Grand Master Dr. Chen.

Today, Sifu Koo's goal is to teach students who are dedicated to learning the true form of Chinese
