The Generations project at Columbia University is now enrolling lesbian, gay and bisexual adults who live in or near New York City into a research interview study. Eligible participants will be asked to meet with researchers and answer question about how they think about their sexual identities and cope with different sources of stress, like prejudice about gender, race/ethnicity, and sexual orientation.

The interview will take approximately 2 Â½ -3 hours. Participants will be compensated $75.00 for their time and participation.

Individuals who are interested can learn more and complete the eligibility survey with recruitment code 0207 at:
