The Plaza Live is one of Orlando's oldest theaters. It was transformed from a cinema, to a theatre space, and finally a music venue.

Dubbed the Rocking Chair Theatre by locals, The Plaza Live was Orlando's first two screen movie theatre. From the 60's up until the early 90's, the theater, small by today's standards, stayed active in a competitive market with declining ticket sales by showing second-run movies and the long running cult classics.

In August 2013, the Orlando Philharmonic Orchestra purchased The Plaza Live building, contents and the building for $3.2 million. The Philharmonic is currently working on extensive renovations to the building to create a rehearsal hall and a music hall and update the existing 100 seats. The hall will accommodate a number of events, which will include a solid style of rock, jazz, and a temporary theater space. The Plaza Live will continue to operate as the Plaza's premier concert venues during and after the renovations. This will give the Orlando Philharmonic a permanent.
