Needing to update my AK driver's license, and was just taking an online practice test -

This question and possible answers came up:

-----

To prevent being struck from behind -

- a) Drive a little faster than the rest of traffic to widen the gap between you and the vehicles behind you
- b) Brake harder than usual
- c) Keep pace with the traffic
- d) Drive slower than the rest of the traffic to better control your vehicle

I didn't like any of the answers, but chose 'c' which was determined to be correct.

But I'm great about not speeding, I just don't - I keep to the speed limit even if vehicles start piling up behind me, which has happened sometimes on long Alaskan roads. I pull over to let others by when the opportunity comes.

It's like that, and like that, even in busier traffic when I live, especially during rush hour traffic, where drivers are expected to speed up a bit in the carpooling lane. I don't want to be a driver who exceeds the speed limit?

That just doesn't sound right. Or am I being too law abiding?

Is that an adequate answer to give to a cop who pulls me over for 'speeding if I'm doing it to keep pace with traffic' was just keeping to the same speed as the other?
