I have a 1978 Honda CB400 available with clean title in my name. I had hoped to make a project out of this bike but I haven't had the time and need to clean up the garage a little. I had the bike running earlier in the summer and decided to try and rewired the bike to be a minimalist cafe racer. Needless to say I quickly found out I had no idea what I was doing. So here it is, a half together cafe racer project. Since the rewiring, I can't get it started (manual start only). I know it runs but sadly can't prove it unless someone who knows a little more about wiring takes a look at it. It's a decent little bike and once finished will definitely get some looks. So take a look and feel free to text/call/email for more information.

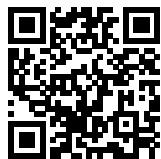

Brand new:

- speedo/tacho (still have the original)
- headlight (still have the original)
- wiring harness
- rear turn signals
- grips/controls
- brake/clutch levers
- clip on handlebars (decided not to use these as they hit the tank when the wheel is turned)
