Recently accepted a position which forces me to travel a lot for work. Just a month prior, I had rescued a bearded dragon who was a bit malnourished and brought her back up to speed. She is eating and drinking like normal. I have had 3 bearded dragon rescues that I had released to new homes about three years ago and I was planning on keeping this particular dragon (due to how extremely docile she is) but unfortunately life happens and I can't let her suffer because of it. She is currently in a 75 gallon tank that will come with some climbing apparatus. She will also be re-homed with all light fixtures, food, calcium, and even a Zilla timed power center. Interested parties should have bearded dragon experience and a means to pick up a 75 gallon tank with accessories. There will be a negotiable re-homing fee which is currently set at $175 (to cover last months expenditures in food, lighting, power center, etc...).

She is a 4 year old female that loves greens and crickets! Contact me if
