If your're thinking about quitting on the MCAT, hang in there. There is hope. I have assisted lots of students prevail on the MCAT when they had nearly given up hope.

The MCAT is a especially challenging marathon and unlike many tests that you may have taken in your life because it tests concepts at a high, conceptual level. Memorizing lots of formulas and doing lots of problems may not help you on the MCAT because of the way that it queries your knowledge. Specifically, the MCAT presents questions in a passage-based format, which can be not familiar to you. You require someone to guide you through this unusual conundrum that is called the MCAT.

This can be where I can assist you. I graduated first in my medical school class, scored in the top 5 percentile of all MCAT test takers, and specialize in MCAT preparation. I have assisted many students, and look forward to assisting you.

Don't abandon the MCAT. Email me instead--I would love to assist.
