Some locksmiths advertising locally may not be local at all or they may not have professional training. What's more, some of them may use intimidating tactics and overcharge you.

If a company answers the phone with a generic phrase like "locksmith services," rather than a company-specific name, be wary. Ask for the legal name of the business. If the person refuses, call another locksmith.

Call three to four locksmiths to get accurate rates. Detail the problem and what you think needs to be done.

Interview the locksmith. Ask about their training, previous jobs, if they're insured and any additional charges.

Locksmiths should be up to date with modern tech. They shouldn't just install locks and pick ones. They should also know about biometric security and other advanced systems.

If you're locked out, be wary if the locksmith wants to drill and replace. A good locksmith knows how to unlock almost any door.

If you're locked out of your car, call roadside assistance first if you have it. There are plans with a list of pre-approved locksmiths to unlock cars.

Here are some common situations where you might need to hire a locksmith, and what you need to consider before giving them your business.
