QR Code Link to This Post Looking for a third guitarist to take the place of my other guitarist who is moving out of town. The guitarist position would be mostly rhythm so it wouldn't be a hard job either, both just need to be willing to learn the songs at practice and at home. A semi hollow-body guitar sounds best for this position and it's what my other guitarist was using. If you don't have one it's fine, I have one you can use. You don't need anything really. If the guitarist knows how to play keyboard (nothing elaborate) that would be a moderate plus. The backup vocals are more important though. Don't have to own equipment as I have some, but that's also a huge plus. The sound is garage/folk/gospel/shoegaze/eastern etc if you're the type who needs to cheapen things through categorization. Transportation is a big plus. Any other questions, message me back or text me. I don't answer unknown number calls so text first if you choose to use the phone and if not, leave a voicemail instead. Someone in their 20's and down to be committed to a band with set sights and be willing to show up to practice twice a week, play shows, do recordings, go on tour, etc. Also, and this has been an epidemic which is why I now need to ad this in..., if you like Red Hot Chili Peppers or any other cheesy pop easy access fast money music don't waste my time (or yours). We are so very far opposite of the spectrum from sounding like that crap or being of that notion and not interested in anyone who think's that's good music. Reply by e-mail. Thanks,
