QR Code Link to This Post My name's Chris, and I'd love to help you with your academic writing and editing needs. Whether it's term papers, dissertations, or grant applications, I bring a thorough eye and attention to detail to all of my editing work.

Why choose me? I hold a PhD in Linguistics, so I'm very familiar with academic writing specifically, and language in general. I've spent more than ten years grading student papers and assignments, so I know what professors are looking for. I have an English-teaching certificate, and have both classroom and tutoring experience working with English leaners. I love working with non-native English speakers! I'm a writer with extensive experience across a range of genres -- I've written everything from academic publications to marketing blog posts to published fiction. I've also co-written two grants funded by the National Science Foundation, netting more than $1 million. In addition, I live in Boston, so I'm happy to meet in person, or chat on the phone, to talk about your particular project and needs. Note that I do all of this work myself--you'll be working directly with me during the whole process. I don't outsource work to other people.

Feel free to reach out and let me know what you need help with. I'm happy to chat, free of charge, and see how we might work together. I'm also happy to provide writing samples, along with a copy of my CV, if you have more questions about my background.

I look forward to working with!
