Some of the benefits of being a movie extra are:

No Experience or Education Needed

Because each film environment differs, movie extras who are needed to make the set look natural also vary. Therefore, people of all shapes and sizes and ethnicities can get work as movie extras.

Meet Celebrities

Imagine rubbing shoulders with the most popular actors and celebrities in show business! A day of background acting could already mean meeting or having the opportunity to act alongside your Hollywood idols.

Easy Work

Extras are used as human props to make a film environment look authentic. They often have little or no lines to memorize. All the big acting skills are required, though. They just don't stand out as the main actors and they instantly become part of the movie.

Work Flexible Hours

Extras don't have long periods of waiting around. Working on film sets is a lot like for the theater, only ready to go at a moment's notice. Waiting around during the day - while getting paid - also means that you have time for internet, reading, texting, or catching up on things you needed to do.

Competitive Pa

On smaller or student productions, background extras acting usually offers low or little pay except for film exposure and/or copy and credit (no pay, only copy and credit of the project). But major film projects pay extras well. In the USA movie extras who are SAG or AFTRA members are paid on union scale, with provisions for overtime, costumes, and special duties. The basic rate for an 8-hour work day for a SAG movie extra ranges from US $130 to US $369. Non-SAG or non-union extras wages vary, but they can be paid even more than that.

Opportunity to Learn More about Acting and/or Modeling

Working as a film extra not only helps develop your acting skills, it also introduces you to the basics of real film-making. For children who want to follow the glitz of Hollywood, playing as movie extras can be used as first film experience to their acting career. For adults, background acting can be a fun part-time job. Extras also experience being on the sets of many movies, televisions, and commercials. Plus, extras get to meet the people behind the film - producers, casting directors, agents, etc. - all those important figures that could open career doors to future superstars.
