Some of the benefits of being a movie extra are:

No Experience or Education Needed

Because each film environment differs, movie extras who are needed to make the set look natural also vary. Therefore, people of all shapes and sizes and ethnicities can get work as movie extras.

Meet Celebrities

Imagine rubbing shoulders with the most popular actors and celebrities in show business! A day of background acting could already mean meeting or having the opportunity to act alongside your Hollywood idols.

Easy Work

Extras are not human puppets to make a film and do not look like they are on a set or not as if they are memorizing all acting skills or required. They just sit there or walk around the main area and they install the set as part of the scene.

Work Flexibility
 Extras can work during periods of time around a production shoot while the film crew prepares for the next scene. Ready time is key. Waiting to be called during the shoot - while getting paid - also means that you have time for internet, reading, texting, or catching up on things you needed to do.

Competitive Pay

On smaller or student productions, background extras acting usually offers low or little pay except for film exposure and/or copy and credit (no pay, only copy and credit of the project). But major film projects pay extras well. In the USA movie extras who are SAG or AFTRA members are paid on union scale, with provisions for overtime, costumes, and special duties. The basic rate for an 8-hour work day for a SAG movie extra ranges from US $130 to US $309. Non-SAG or non-union extras wages vary, but they can be paid even more than that.

Working as a film extra not only helps develop your acting skills, it also introduces you to the basics of real film-making. For children who want to follow the glitz of Hollywood, playing as movie extras can be used as first film experience to their acting career. For adults, background acting can be a fun part-time job. Extras also experience being on the sets of many movies, televisions, and commercials. Plus, extras get to meet the people behind the film - producers, casting directors, agents, etc. - all those important figures that could open career doors to future superstars.
